USE OF SPELTER ON DECLINE.

Engineering and Mining Journal Explains Slump in Ore Prices.

The Engineering and Mining Journal is authority for the statement that there has been a decided decline in the use of spelter; that many brass manufacturers no longer require the same amount of spelter they did in former days and the Journal states also that possibly in the future galvanizers will not make such heavy demands upon the spelter supply.

Whether this is correct or not is problematical, Jasper county miners say. The demand for spelter for brass manufacture may not be as great and the same conditions may exist among the galvanizers, but in Jasper county district the supply of zinc has been greatly increased, thus increasing the supply of spelter. The production of zinc ore in the Missouri-Kansas district has steadily increased for years and the demand for the product has kept pace, but just at this time, when every mine in the district has worked to its fullest capacity, there comes a slump in the demand for spelter and the magazines devoted to the interests of other than zinc ore producers announce without hesitation that the use of spelter is decreasing.—Press.
